

Visiting Cincinnati Ballet A Social Narrative

When I arrive at Cincinnati Ballet,
I can park in the parking lot behind the building, next to the highway.

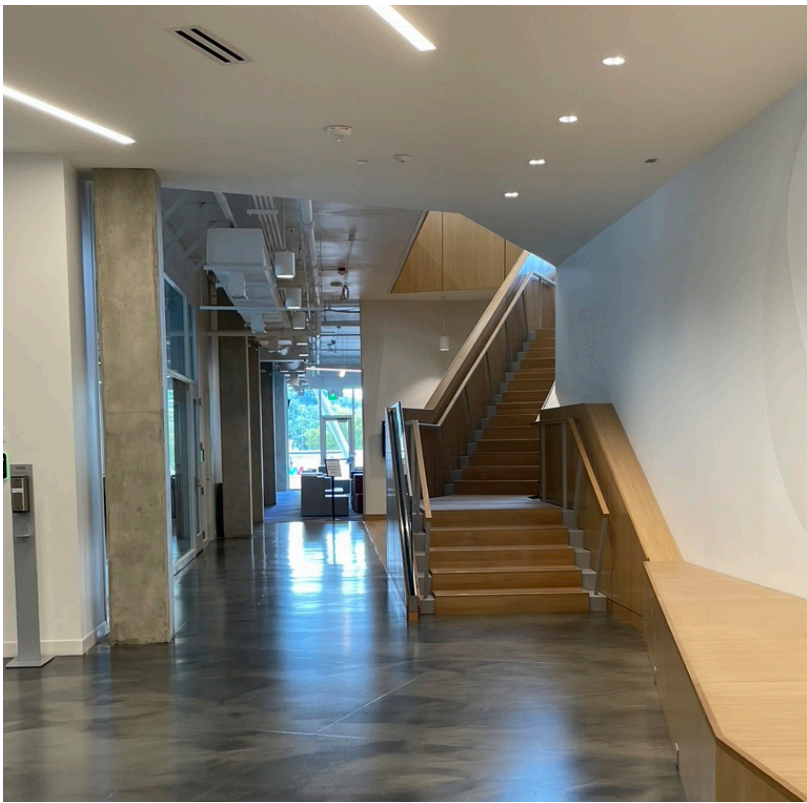

There is accessible parking next to the double doors that I will enter to go to my dance class!

I will enter through the Craig and Anne Maier Artistic Entrance doors. I will press the button on the wall. When I do, the welcome desk staff member will say “hello!” and they will press the buzzer to let me in the building.

Through the doors, there is a hallway to the elevator.
I will get in the elevator and press number 1.

When the elevator opens on the 1st floor, I will see a long hallway. My studio is at the end of this hallway.

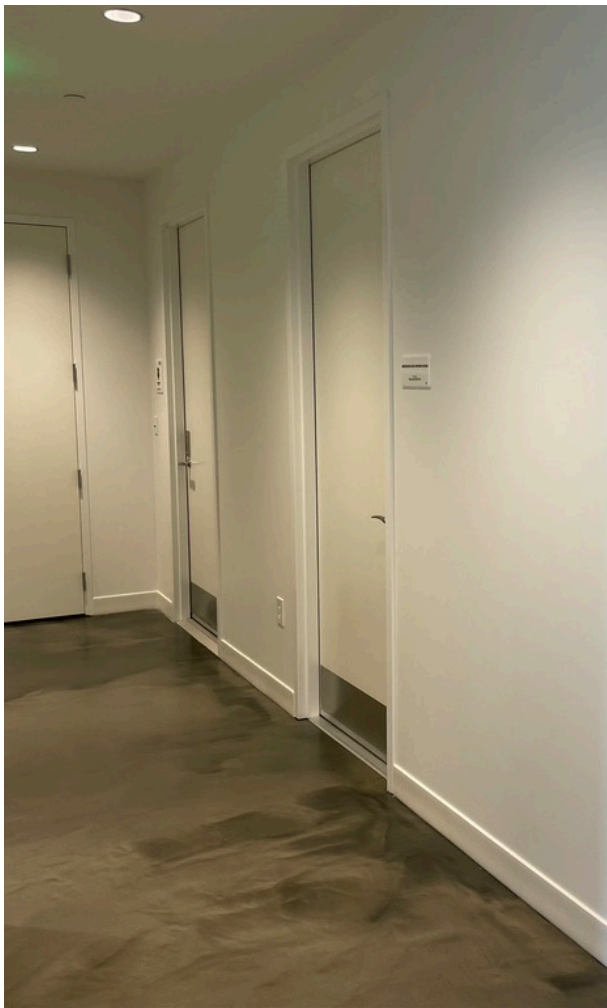

Before I go down the hallway, to my right there is a waiting area with tables and chairs where my family can wait for me during my class.

I can wait here before or after my class too.

In the waiting area, there is a shop where I can buy snacks and drinks.

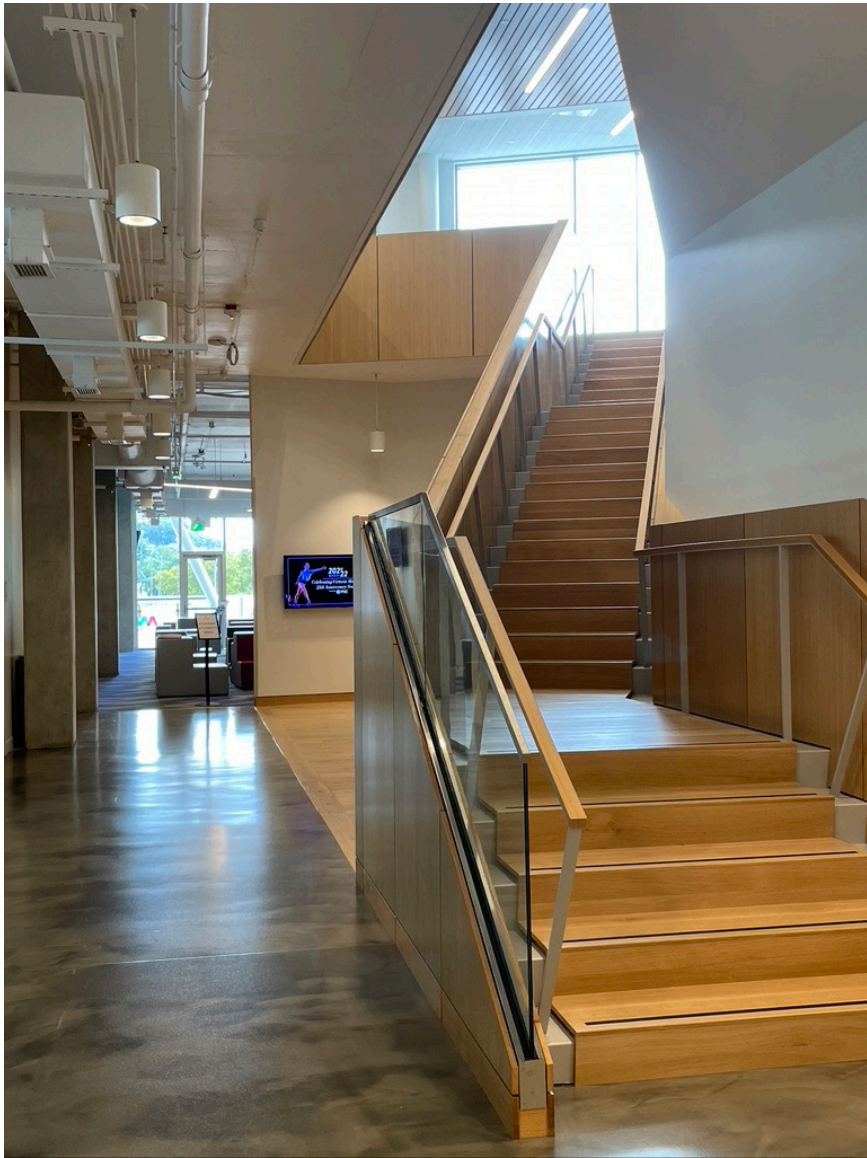

I can ask the adult who is with me to buy something. I may not have a choice of what they buy. That is okay.

The quiet meditation and nursing room is near the waiting area.

This is where I can go if I need a break.

This is a very quiet space.

I will go down the hallway towards the big staircase to get to the Otto M. Budig Community Studio.

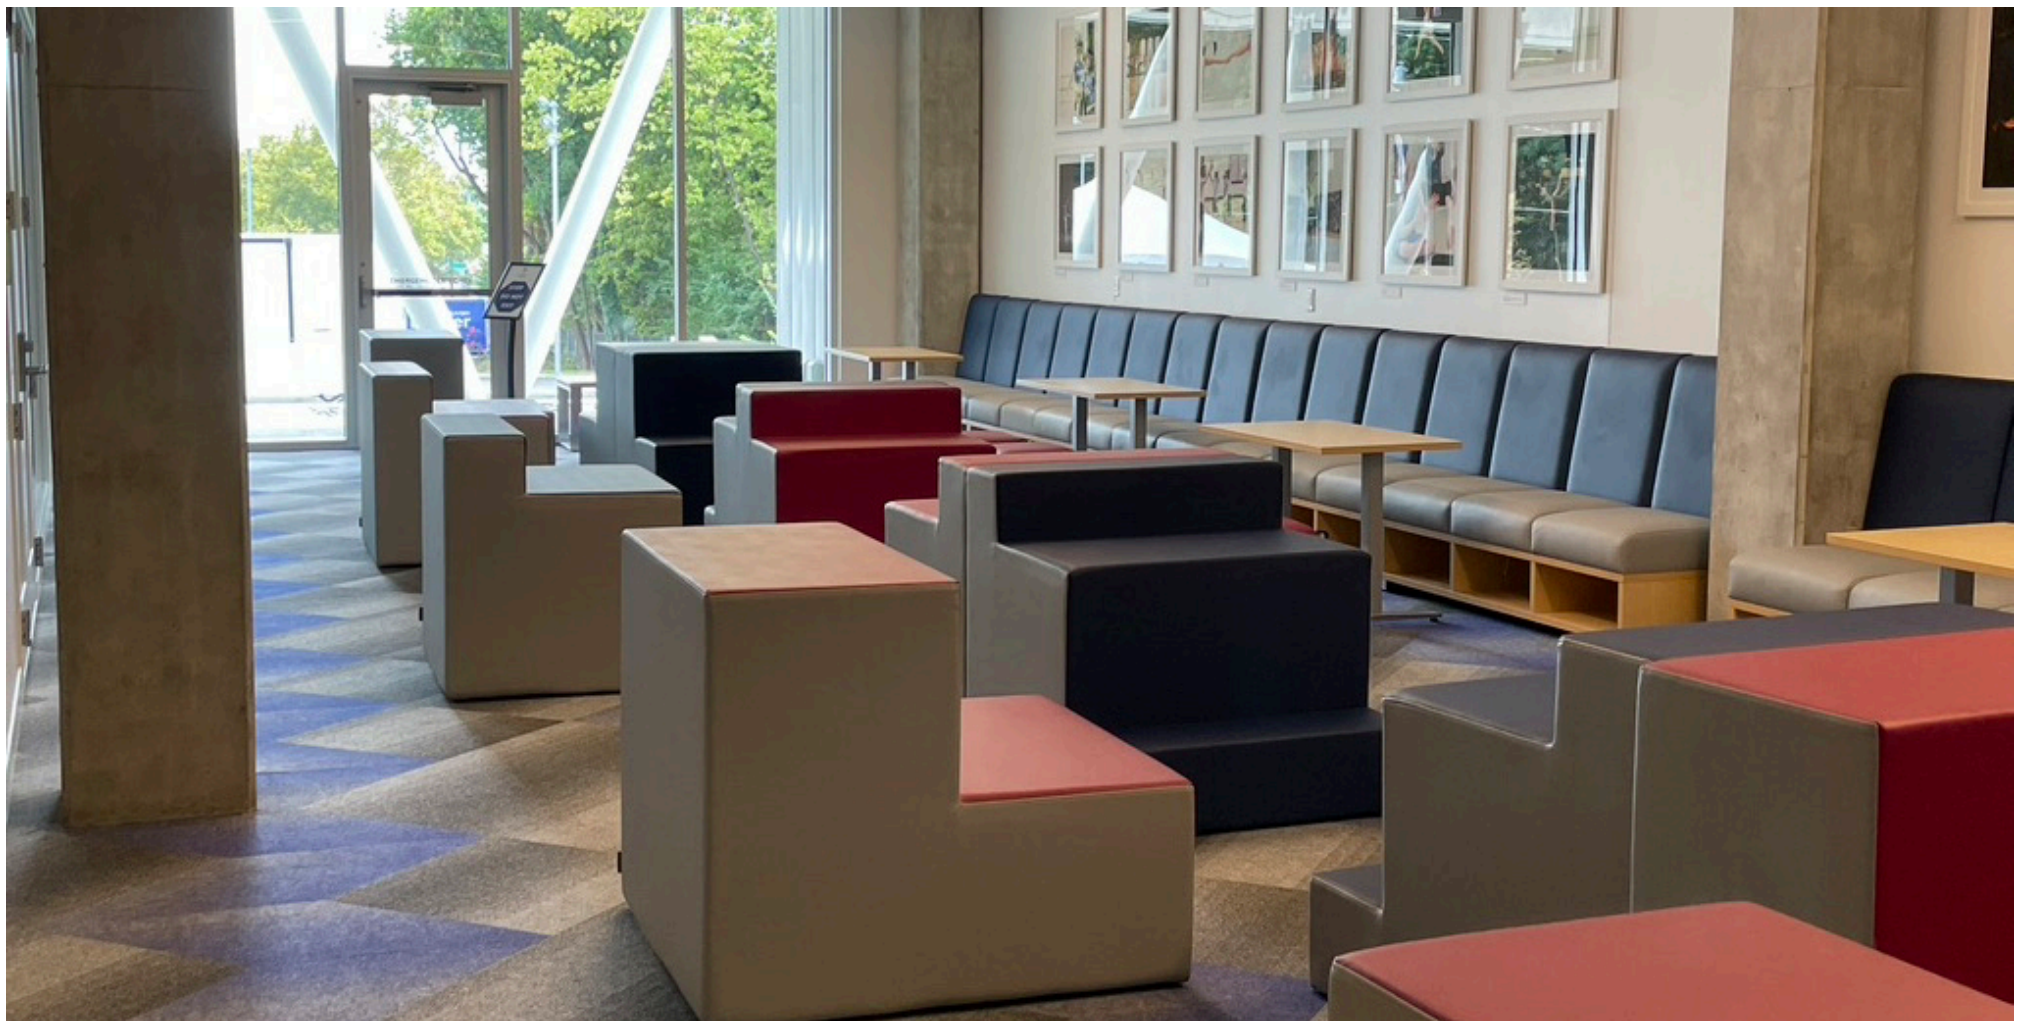

Past the big staircase in the hallway, there is an accessible restroom everyone can use.

At the end of the hallway, there are changing booths. This is where I can change into my dance clothes.

There is a water fountain; this is where I can fill up my water bottle.

Outside of the Otto M. Budig Community Studio, there is a large waiting room.

This is where I will wait until it is time for my class.
My family can wait here too.

My classes take place in the Otto M. Budig Community Studio. I am not allowed to bring in any food or drinks, except water. I am allowed to bring in my water bottle.

This room has overhead lifts.

When I am in class, if I need a break, there is a quiet corner.

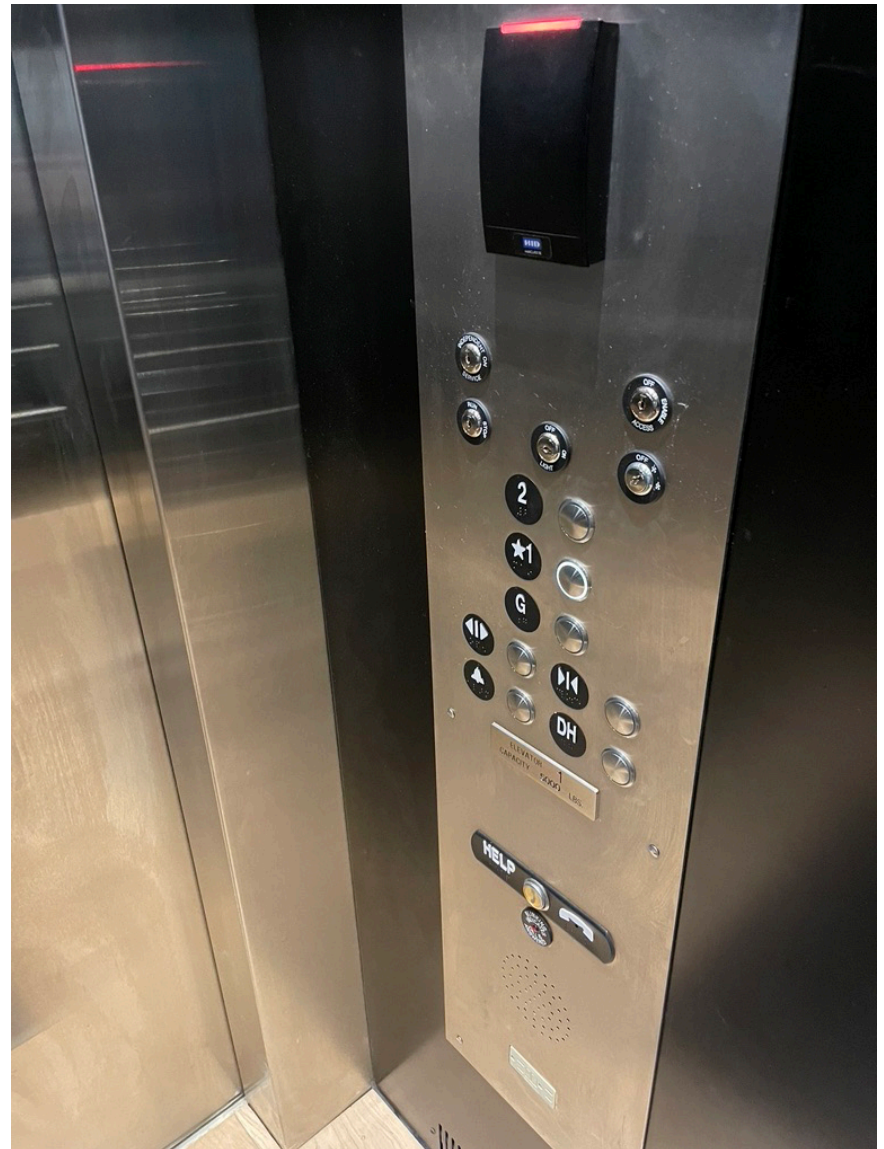

I can go here to listen to class while I take a break.

I can ask for a break if I need one.

When I finish my class, I can go back into the large waiting room or change back into my regular clothes in the changing booth.

I will NOT exit through the glass doors.

I will exit the way I came in.

I will go down the hallway to the elevator.

I will press G, to go down to the Ground floor.

I will exit the building through the same double doors that I walked through when I got here today.

I did a great job today!
